WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 24, 1879.

The Democratic Mephitic Americana of this city is unalloyed over Secretary EVARTS' mastery effort in New York.

It will take the New York World, even with its uniform amiability, a long time to forgive Mr. EVARTS for his able and timely speech in that city recently. It has disgruntled the Democratic party more than anything that has been uttered in years. They may carp at it, but it is unanswerable—and that's what's the matter.

GENERAL ARTHUR, chairman of the New York Republican State committee, gives it as his deliberate opinion that the whole Republican State ticket will be elected by from twenty to thirty thousand majority, and that Mr. CORNELL's majority will reach nearly one hundred thousand over ROBINSON. With such a margin and a vigorously worked canvass, such as the Republicans have in hand, there cannot be much doubt of the success of the Republican cause in the Empire State.

The Democrats do not seem to fancy our pyramid of Republican States, though it is impossible for them to disturb a block in its rising proportions. Now we will appeal to their tastes in a more delicate if not in a more acceptable manner by presenting an acoustic, which is as inevitably in their way as the pyramid. Consult it:

NEW YORK.

GRANT.

There is a story afloat that both KELLY and ROBINSON are to withdraw from the New York canvass and permit CLARKSON N. POTTER, now candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, to run for Governor. This tale obtains credence from the well-known fact that S. JONES TILDEN promised the New York Governorship to the head of the POTTER Committee, pending its notorious non-investigation of the Presidential title question. But it is hardly probable that ROSS KELLY would agree to such a proposition. He knows full well that POTTER is a TILDEN man from sole to scalp, and it is not ROBINSON that he is fighting so much as it is TILDEN. On the other hand, it appears that the leaders of the ROBINSON wing disclaim any knowledge of a movement looking to a reunion between the factions. Mr. FOWLER, chairman of the ROBINSON State Executive committee, says that nothing of the sort was known to him or to any members of the committee. He knows of no one who was attempting to make a compromise or who desired one.

ONE of the probable blunders of the coming session of Congress will be an attempt to abolish our foreign missions. On the bald pretense of economy, the Democratic majority in that body will essay to further disgrace the Government by withdrawing its diplomatic representatives from the courts and governments of the civilized world. However strong this argument may be, and however ridiculous the display of American diplomacy may be made to appear, there are many reasons, and good ones, in support of a continuance of the present system. Not the least of these is the fact, conceded by intelligent and unprejudiced people generally, that the dignity and importance of the United States would suffer by its abrogation. As an incentive to emigration, alone, directly or indirectly, our legations abroad are worth more than they cost, and as reliable agencies through which to obtain accurate, intelligent and unprejudiced accounts of the progress of governmental affairs abroad they are invaluable. And, as we have said before, the presence of our direct and vicarious representatives of our Government is required at all times, imperatively required, for the protection of our native-born and naturalized citizens who may visit beyond our borders either for business, adventure or pleasure. The faithful and discreet performance of this duty has saved us in the past from bloody and expensive wars, notably with Spain in the Virginia affair, and will be required for similar emergencies in the future.

MR. CLARKSON N. POTTER, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor of New York, declined, refused and repudiated the idea of his being nominated for any office by the Syracuse convention in the most emphatic language at his command. But he accepted the nomination nevertheless, and in his letter of acceptance referred to this emphatic denial, saying, in effect, that he yielded to the superior power of the regularly constituted authorities of the Democratic party. His inconsistency in this special regard was all the more apparent because he first declined the nomination for Governor and then accepted the candidacy for Lieutenant-Governor. His Democratic friends and supporters entirely ignore this crooked incident in his career; but they do not ignore the fact that General GRANT has been reported as having declined the Presidential nomination, nor do they neglect any opportunity to remark that his probable acceptance of it, to save the Government from falling into the hands of its enemies, would be an inconsistent act. Mr. POTTER's refusal, written as it was with all the formality of a letter to the delegates of the convention at whose hands he was subsequently nominated, was quite a different thing from General GRANT's reported declination in a conversation with a far-off foreigner in China. Besides, the two men are not differently placed, for there was not even a partisan, and certainly not a patriotic, reason for Mr. POTTER's sudden change of base.

SOUTHERN CRAWFISHING.

The Southern Democrats are a little staggered when called upon to confront their dogma of State sovereignty, and are ready to plead an alibi without proof to sustain it. Even the Louisville Courier-Journal, when the issue it has created is held up to view, exclaims: "There is not a party in 'the country which believes or asserts' that the States are supreme." We assert here and now that the Southern portion of the Democratic party—and that is about all of it—during the late extra session of Congress made the country by their utterances and acts believe that they believed in State supremacy, and the country has taken them at their word, and will settle the account as presented and stated by themselves. It is too late, in the face of recorded history, to attempt an escape now from the full responsibility of the position the Democrats have taken on this question. The attitude assumed by that party on the supervisors of election law, and the right of the Nation to protect the ballot-box in the election of National officers, even in the use of its own troops, if needs be, was nothing less than a declaration that the States are and shall be supreme, and that the National power shall surrender its prerogatives to the States in the matter of the election of its own officers.

The Courier-Journal cannot afford to say that THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN "has 'always been an organ of Napoleonism,' unless it can afford to stand responsible for a palpable untruth. THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN has stood fearlessly by the Constitution and the Union in their integrity, and unless that is Napoleonism, the charge of the C-J cannot in any degree lie against it. It would be far better if our contemporary would get down to the work of honestly sustaining this Government in its integrity and supremacy in all matters relating to the National welfare, instead of skinning around under false colors, and like the waterman, look one way and row the other. There is no half-way house on the road of loyalty to the Nation, and if the C-J desires to secure for itself or its party public confidence in their devotion to the cause of National supremacy, they must make a new and more consistent record for themselves at the loyal end of the path. The people cannot be deceived any longer on this point.

NATIONAL SUPREMACY.

There is no possibility of a peace, or even of a truce, until one or the other party is utterly vanquished, and either the Nation or the States declared supreme.—The National Republican.

Then there will never be any "peace" if it must come in that way. Neither the Union or the States can possibly be "supreme" as compared to the other, and all such statements are base.—Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser.

Whether "both" or not, the men who conquered the rebellion will never consent to the doctrine that there is no supreme power in the Constitution of the United States over every inch of its territory, and they will fight it out on that line if it takes centuries. To consent that the Nation is not supreme over all its domain is to concede the right of secession and that the bond of Union may be broken at will by any State combined within its compact. It is the seed of secession and rebellion that the South is now fruitfully under the banner of peace, and so long as that is attempted, as we said before, there is no possibility of a permanent peace or even of a truce, until that question is settled by full conquest that the Nation is supreme, or one or the other of the parties to the issue is utterly vanquished. The integrity and supremacy of the Nation was the objective point of the war to crush rebellion, and that principle of right will never be yielded by the loyal people of the United States until they and their children and their children's children shall have been vanquished and wiped out. The South, if it intends to perpetuate in this Nation the heresy of State supremacy, did not reopen that question one moment too soon for the National welfare. The sooner the issue is made, the sooner over, for the end must come sometime. That dogma will never be tolerated by the conquerors of the rebellion. They will not resort to force in arms to resist it, unless, as in 1861, the unity and integrity of the Nation demand it, but they will meet it at the ballot-box and there combat it until it is everlastingly by popular sentiment. Their readiness to do this is evidenced by the popular developments since the late extra session of Congress. So soon as it became apparent that the doctrine of State sovereignty was to be the rallying point of the late insurgent States, the loyal people met it in every loyal State, and they have been literally crushed out by the ballot. This is and will continue to be the absorbing and controlling question until the South makes full and faithful surrender of the heresies that led to the war.

The Leadville (Col.) Reveille, a bright, intelligent and vigorous young man among the rapidly-increasing dailies of that growing State, dabbles in National politics as earnestly as any of its seniors, East or West. Remarking upon the Southern question, it says:

There is about the same chance for the Republican party carrying one of the lately rebellious States in the next election that there is of conquering any part in that section charged with the murder of leading Republican citizens. The Republican party in the South is dead, past resurrection, and not a solitary Electoral vote need be looked for from that section, except for the solid, undiluted, Simon-pure, Ku-Klux Democratic candidate. There are plenty of Republicans in the South, but the bludgeon, the rifle and the pistol have so completely exterminated them, have terrified them into respectful silence.

To this untimely concession of a Solid South, carrying with it, as it does, an utter abandonment of the Republican party as a political organization, we enter an earnest protest. It is true the South is solidly Democratic now, and further, that it will remain so unless some effort is made to reclaim it to the cause of good government; but we hold that it is the bounden duty of good Republicans everywhere to encourage such an effort for its reclamation. In this way, and in this way only, can the Republican party free itself from the charge of sectionalism. If it fails to encourage the development of its principles all over the country, and to cherish its strength, however discouraging the attempt may be, in every State, county, town and hamlet in the Union, it will most assuredly render itself liable to the charge that it cares only for the North, and that it is engaged in arranging the South for its miscondemned solely and simply to unify the Northern States. Wherever, as in Florida, North and South Carolina and Tennessee, the chance is offered to foster the growth of its principles, there should this effort be especially made and this encouragement be most willingly extended. Besides, it must not be forgotten that Florida, Louisiana and South Carolina saved the Nation and the party at the last election.
